FLOWER POWER

"Luxury today is about immersive, meaningful experiences," says Belgium-based Tomas De Bruyne, renowned for his bespoke floral architectural experiences. Following this idea, he says weddings will evolve into curated journeys. "A key trend will be multi-layered floral compositions set in a hyper-personalised space, with evolving installations, scent-scaping, and floral walls that respond to lighting and music."

Consider a sangeet he designed at the Hungarian Railway Museum in Budapest—a nod to the couple's meeting at a train station. In the expansive space, amid steel tracks and aged locomotives, he created an ambience that was fluid and celebratory. Bold colours of crimson, topaz, and fire opal; oversized centrepieces, floral chandeliers, and AI-generated designs together created a layered visual experience.
